Why They're a Match

Backend Ventures focuses on infrastructure and developer tools — exactly the category The Brain occupies as a "memory layer for companies." They back technical founders building foundational AI/SaaS infrastructure. Known for being founder-friendly and age-agnostic. Strong thesis around AI-native tools and platforms that other developers build on top of.

Outreach Strategy

Reach out via their website or LinkedIn (search for Backend Ventures partners). Key framing: "We're building the context infrastructure layer that every AI tool needs but no one has built for SMBs." Position The Brain as the "backend for AI" — the memory and context layer that makes AI agents actually useful. Reference the Mem0/Granola funding wave as market validation.

Why They're a Match

Lux Capital invests in science and technology at the frontier — they have a strong AI/infrastructure thesis and are known for backing deep tech. Partners like Brandon Reeves have written extensively about AI memory and context layers. They're founder-age-agnostic and care about technical depth. May write a smaller pre-seed check for the right team.

Outreach Strategy

Find partners on Twitter/X (Brandon Reeves, Peter Hebert) and engage with their content before pitching. Key framing: "The AI memory layer is the missing infrastructure piece. We're building it for the 500M businesses that can't afford to figure this out themselves." Lux respects technical founders who can articulate why now and why them.

Why They're a Match

Village Global is a network-driven fund backed by 200+ unicorn founders (including Zuckerberg, Bezos, Thiel). They have an explicit AI thesis and invest globally. Their "Venture Stories" podcast and community make them accessible. They back founders at the earliest stages and are very open to international teams. The LP network alone is worth the relationship.

Outreach Strategy

Apply at villageglobal.vc/apply. Key framing: "We're building the AI memory layer that makes every SaaS tool in a startup's stack 10x more valuable." Village Global loves network effects — emphasize that The Brain gets more valuable as more data/context is added (data moat). Mention the MENA-first angle as a wedge into a massive underserved market.

Why They're a Match

500 Global has deep MENA presence (they've invested in 50+ MENA startups) and runs accelerators in the region. They're one of the most active pre-seed investors globally and are extremely founder-age-agnostic. They have a strong AI thesis and specifically look for startups solving real problems in underserved markets. Cairo-based is an advantage here, not a disadvantage.

Subject: The AI memory layer for 500M SMBs ($50B market by 2035)

Subject: 95% of AI spend generates no ROI — we're fixing that for SMBs

Hi [First Name],

[Personalized line referencing something they wrote/invested in about AI memory, context layers, or SMB tools]

We're building The Brain AIOS — a proactive AI operating system that gives every small company a centralized brain. It remembers every decision, meeting, and document, and acts on that context automatically.

The problem: SMBs use 15+ SaaS tools that don't talk to each other. AI tools generate no ROI because they have no persistent memory. MIT found 95% of enterprise AI spend ($40B) generated no meaningful return — because there's no context layer.

We're that context layer. MENA-first, Cairo-based (2x cost advantage), MVP live.

Raising a $400K pre-seed SAFE at $3.5M cap. [Specific reason why this investor specifically].

Deck attached. 15-min call this week?
